1. For the most part intellectuals living in Communist China are now adhering to the Communist line as the price to be paid for existence.* CHIEN Tuan-sheng, for instance, for health reasons and because his family has been knocked from pillar to post since 1937, has answered the call of the Communists.
2. Chinese Communist internal reforms are a failure, and agreements reached in Moscow are considered by thinking Chinese to be very sinister, since many vital secret agreements were reached by MAO Tse-tung and Stalin which are feared to be to the detriment of China's future.
3. Cliques and rivalries within Chinese Communist ranks are known to exist; the nationalist Communists are struggling against the pro-Soviet or internationalist clique. This struggle will not be as easy for the Government to cope with as was the case with the warlords in the past.

* Comment. The authoritative word among the Chinese intellectuals is now that Communist China is definitely unsound, that the Communists are bad for China. This means that the students of the future will unite in secrecy against them. A chink in the moral armor of the Chinese Communists has been opened. This is important because MAO has often looked like Sir Galahad and the Communist claim of moral superiority, as a result, has been hard to deny.
